Underground Ventilation.

The natural ventilation of underground railways is impracticable because the air current may be reversed, owing to atmospheric conditions, becoming nil in spring and autumn, so that mechanical ventilation imposes itself. Professor Conjour to the French civil engineers. The only solution of the problem compatible with safety, in his opinion, to exhaust the vitiated air by fans erected midway between the stations, these latter serving as inlets.

STRIKE HELPS BOSTON.

Clean Freight For New York Taken to That Port.

Boston, May 22.—Boston shipping is being benefited by the longshoremen's strike in New York. A considerable amount of freight intended for that city has reached here on the Cymric from Liverpool and will be transhipped. A good deal of the Cymric's New York cargo was intended for the Victorian, which has been withdrawn from the New York Liverpool service owing to the strike.

Other shipments bound for this port have heavy shipments of freight destined for the metropolis. It is not believed that the withdrawal of ships from New York will result in their being sent here, but incoming cargo will be correspondingly heavier. The Cymric freight is being shipped to New York by rail.

MASTERING WILLIE.

His Mamma Had Her Own Way of Subduing Willie.

An amusing little comedy which fell remarkably neatly into beginning, middle and end, was observed in a city restaurant yesterday afternoon. A lady was having tea with a grown up daughter and a little boy, when she was joined by another lady, who also had a little boy. The second little boy engaged the first in conversation, telling of a matinee at one of the places of entertainment. His tale seemed chiefly of a bioscope. The second lady and the second little boy retired after a short stay, and it at once appeared that the original little boy, in spite of his cakes, was out of temper, for all at once he threw himself back from the table into his cushioned chair till his feet only just protruded over the edge of the seat. "Drink your milk," said the mother. "Take me to the bioscope," answered the little boy. "Oh, I see, you're going to be troublesome," said the mother. "Very well (to the daughter) don't take any further notice of him; ignore him altogether." "I want to go to the bioscope," said the little boy rudely. "Yes, you were going, but you're not now," said the mother, whereupon the little boy kicked upwards at the table with marked success. "Don't dare to do that again," cried the lady severely. "Bioscope," cried the little boy, retreating her look with defiance. But the mother had disciplinary resources beyond the boy's calculations. He remained sulky until she arose to go, when arose too. "Oh, no," she said, moving away. "Don't come with us, you go to the bioscope." But to the amusement of the waitress, the small boy meekly followed. "Certainly not," said his mother, repulsing him firmly; "you want to go to the bioscope." "No, I want to come with you," said the little boy anxiously. The mother and daughter left him and walked in a resolute way as far as the top of the stairs, whereupon he pursued them with lamentations. "Don't you want to go to the bioscope now?" she asked in a relenting manner. "No, I don't want to go now—I want you," replied the little boy with obvious sincerity. The mother smiled, looked around with an air of triumph, and led him penitently forth. For his penitence she was happily heart to tell him that he might possibly yet go to the bioscope if he remained good—from the Manchester Guardian.
